Research focus area	We are looking for candidates interested in cross-disciplinary training to bridge their background in computational approaches (data science, network science, computer modelling, and NLP) with cognitive science and human experimental methods. We have various projects focusing on understanding the mind, in particular language emergence in individuals and societies. Over the last 20 years we have developed a solid international network of global collaborations across Europe, the US, and Asia. We are able to host and support both MSCA IF and Global scholarships.
Department	DISFOR - Department of Educational Sciences
Short description of the department/laboratory/research group	The PI has directed labs in the US and Asia, and has launched a new research team at the University of Genoa. The lab focuses on cognitive mechanisms of human learning, to explore how language emerges both in individuals and societies. We combine behavioural and computational methods including eye-tracking, NLP, network science, and computer simulation.
